It's the Esperanto alphabet. "What the heck is Esperanto?" I'm glad you asked! It's a planned international language. It's much easier to learn than other languages, so people everywhere can learn it as a second and shared language. One reason it's easier is that the pronunciation is very regular: each letter has exactly one sound, with no silent letters. (And the accent is always on the next-to-last syllable.) The grammar is streamlined and consistent too: no irregular verbs, no complicated conjugations.

Four times easier to learn, politically acceptable everywhere, and two million people who speak it. Is it time for you to learn a language?

Esperanto — the international language that works.
