

Meet the world

halfway!

“Why doesn’t everyone just speak English?” Have you looked at English lately? It’s easy to learn to speak badly, yes... but even native speakers have trouble with plurals (“try/tries”, “goose/geese”, “fish/fish”), with tenses (“did speak” or “spoke”?), with apostrophes and possessives (“Bob’s” possession vs “Bob’s” contraction), spelling, et cetera et cetera. Way to make other people struggle with something that you at least have decades of experience with. And you probably don’t want to learn 180 verb endings in someone else’s language.

Let’s meet people halfway. A planned, streamlined, very regular language that both sides can use? One that you can learn four times faster than other languages, and that two million people already speak? It’s Esperanto! Just try it and you’ll say, “Ne problemo!”

Esperanto — the international language that works!
